We do not accept responsibility for third party damage to your bike and in all cases, the owner of the Bike is responsible for ensuring it is insured for an appropriate value during handling and transit, in the same way an individual would if sending the item through a mailing service or carriage on an aircraft.

63 Velo are not valuers and as such are not able to ascertain a value on your bike in the event that one is required.

In the unusual situation that we have engaged a partner business in relation to air freight, we have ensured that the following applies:

The contractor is insured under the CMR regulations.

Under a CMR contract the carrier bears some limited liability (although this is determined on a case-by-case basis and sometimes the liability can be total). You should expect any payout set by these regulations to be low, so YOU should arrange the appropriate insurance cover to the value of your bike.

The CMR Convention (full title Convention on the Contract for the International Carriage of Goods by Road) is a United Nations convention that was signed in Geneva on 19 May 1956

All European countries are members of this Convention.
